

Ruth Beneth Guerrero Sepúlveda

ENGLISH

using your supporting stories to argue your essays.

Tolerance to persons with neuronal conditions, a short line between equality and the unfair because of prejudices

As we know, the human body is as complex as the specific conditions which allowed our existence, and if we are talking about complexity we can't forget to talk about the organ who characterises us as humans, our brain.

Going to the point, the brain is very complex, for some reasons its structure or composition can be variable and because of it there is some conditions that we know as the autism or down syndrome, the bout which implicates a different form in which the brain works and understands the world, and if well as society we develop different ways to deal with it, it important to recognize the problems and more that short line between the equality for their different capacities and the prejudices and the unhealthy excess of tolerance to this individuals.

Because of prejudices we encapsulate the persons with autism or down syndrome, just like the autisms as unstable persons which any hard stimuli can makes them crazy and because of that misunderstood genius because their amazing ability of information retention, and then we have the down syndrome persons that are only poor babies trapped into his body that doesn't stop to grow leaving behind his mind, pure and innocent creatures.

This can sound very exaggerated but it's just like the tv shows and social media represents it, just like the "Greatest Doctor" as example or in some telenovelas that i remember see my mom saying how autistic persons are incapable of lying.

And there is another example, how I live in a lot of unfair situations with my big brother lying to my mom to get what he wants. He was a low case of autism but there I am seeing how he is disrespectful to my parents or to me every day, that results in very stressful..

And then we have situations in which parents, following the prejudices of infinite innocence of these beings, are giving them an excess of tolerance which results unhealthy to them.

They never learn to don't do bad things, because they are normal to them, not because of their conditions, but because of their education.

Maybe they can have some problems to understand and learn, this can vary depending on the degree of their condition but not because of that you will allow your little down special child to punch the other kids and then get mad if some of them decides to defend himself.

And maybe yes they are not guilty of having their condition, the parents are the main responsible, their trying to be tolerant and equal with the child ends in a spoil, unfair situations and me without my cellphone.

And this are the reasons of with i think and you should think in the existence of this short line between the equality and the spoil, if well there aren't the most quantity of cases, there is some debate about the real treat that this persons should have, but the reality is that raise is hard and more if we are talking about conditions as the autism and down syndrome, is necessary to be conscience and equality?, yes it is, but being careful and differencing it of an excess of tolerance or prejudices tracking.